GRACE PRESBYTERIAN SUNDAY SCHOOL WINS IN ATTENDANCE RACE

The Grace Presbyterian Sunday school was the winner in the inter-Sunday school contest, and will be given a party by the lo[illegible] Sunday schools on Saturday afternoon of this week, December 8, at Lebanon Presbyterian church, on Twenty-third street, near Sanchez street, San Francisco.

All members of the Grace Presbyterian church Sunday school are invited to attend. They will meet at the church at 1 o'clock, and go in a body on the street cars to Lebanon church. If you can not go at that time, come later. Take Mission street car, transfer at Twenty-second street to No. 11, and get off at Sanchez street. Games, program and refreshments are planned by the entertaining schools.

Regular services at Grace Presbyterian church next Sunday. Divine worship at 8 p. m., the topic for the pastor's sermon being "The Fullness of the Time." Sunday school meets at 10 a. m. Our goal is 150 attendance by Christmas. Come and hear the plans for Christmas. The Christmas festival for the Sunday school will be on Friday evening, December 23. POPULAR YOUNG COUPLE ARE UNITED IN MARRIAGE

Miss Margaret Hass, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. R. E. Hass, of 891 Brunswick street, and Charles Winfield McKee, son of Mr. and Mrs. Charles D. McKee, of 79 Irvington street, a popular young couple of Daly City, were quietly married last Saturday afternoon in Santa Cruz, at the First Presbyterian church, the Rev. Moore, officiating. Miss Evelyn McKee, sister of the groom, and Philip Hass, brother of the bride, attended them.

After the ceremony a wedding dinner was served at a cafe in Santa Cruz to the bridal party, consisting of the bride and groom, Mr. and Mrs. Charles W. McKee, Mr. and Mrs. R. E. Hass, Mr. and Mrs. Charles D. McKee, Miss Evelyn McKee and Philip Hass.

Both the bride and groom are well known in Daly City. The bride until her marriage was a student at Jefferson Union high school and their popular yell leader. The groom, who has lived here since he was four months old, is a graduate of Crocker school and an officer in Crocker Chapter, Order of De Molay.

The young couple, who are now making their home in a pretty little apartment in San Francisco, have the best wishes of their many friends for a long and happy married life.

LADIES' AID TO HOLD ANNUAL BAZAAR AND ENTERTAINMENT

The Ladies' Aid of Grace Presbyterian church will give their annual bazaar and entertainment next Thursday, December 13. The ladies have been busy for many weeks, and great preparations are being made for the event. It will be held in the church building, corner Evergreen avenue and Hanover street. The bazaar will open about 2 p. m., and will continue during the afternoon and evening. There will be a fine display of beautiful and useful articles suitable for Christmas gifts. Included in the bazaar will be a fancy work booth, apron booth, candy booth, and a food table. Also afternoon tea will be served during the afternoon.

A feature of of special interest will be the "Gypsy" fortune tell[illegible], who will be on hand, ready to tell your fortune. She has remarkable ability along this line, and will surprise and delight those who avail themselves of the opportunity. Then the big event of the evening will be the entertainment, or program. The ladies are planning to present "The Spinsters' Convention." It is a perfect "scream," one of the funniest things in recent years. If you want to "laugh till your sides ache," plan to stay for the "Old Maids' Convention," at 8 o'clock, and see the Professor's patent machine for—well, that would be telling, so come and see, and have a good time. Admission, adults 25 cents, children 15 cents.

Mrs. Lena Marks Passes Away

Mrs. Lena Marks, of Los Banos avenue, passed away in Belmont last Saturday, after an illness of several months duration. Mrs. Marks was the beloved wife of Arthur Marks, and daughter of Antone and the late Jennie Peralta. She was a native of Walnut Creek, California. She was a member of Golden West Temple No. 45, Pythian Sisters, and Vista Grande Circle No. 253, A. O. F. Funeral services were held last Tuesday in San Francisco, and cremation took place at Mt. Olivet cemetery.

ST. MAXIMUS BOYS ORGANIZING TEAMS

The St. Maximus Boys' Club is commencing to use the recreational facilities that were recently erected to the rear of the church. The athletic field will be used for the development of baseball, basketball, and handball teams, and the social hall is ideal for tumbling, wrestling, boxing and gymnastic teams. Arrangements are being made for the use of a swimming tank at least once a week, and the boys will also form a swimming team.

The St. Maximus Boys' Club has been divided into two sections, the Seniors and Juniors. The Seniors are composed of boys from the age of 16 upwards. They have been formed for a year and did much of the construction work on the athletic field, besides sponsoring an entertainment and dance at the high school that was pronounced a great success.

The Juniors were officially organized Wednesday of this week, when Mr. Ed Dougherty, who is in charge of all the activities of the Y. M. I. Juniors, a group of twelve hundred boys, was on hand to take over the formation of an organization and teams. He will be present every Wednesday afternoon to coach and develop the teams of the Juniors. St. Maximus parish has affiliated the Juniors with the Catholic Boys' Athletic League, and they have become a charter member of the league which is being formed all over the Archdiocese of San Francisco. Arrangements have already been made to give the boys who so desire the opportunity of going to summer camp on the shore of a stream among the redwoods of Santa Cruz mountains. The cost of a vacation is $35 for a month, or $20 for two weeks. The cost also includes a pair of corduroys, sweater and cap.

The officers of the St. Maximus Boys' Club, Seniors, are: William Sweeney, president; Walter Murphy, vice-president; Henry Henrioulle, secretary; Clifford Fields, treasurer; Hugh Smith, marshal. The Seniors are having meetings to complete plans to put teams on the field in the near future. They have already received offers to play teams as far south as San Luis Obispo.

New Organ Installed in Church

A treat is in store for the parishioners of St. Maximus parish, who will hear for the first time at the Sunday morning masses the beautiful and sweet tones of the new organ which has ben installed in the church during the week by Sherman, Clay & Co. This new instrument was manufactured by Estey Organ Co., and is an exceptionally fine one. It will be an occasion of joy for the choir that sing at the morning services for the reason that they had to be satisfied during the past years with a litle old, out-of-date, badly used up harmonium which was in use fifty years ago in a down town parish.

THREE THRILLERS AT METHODIST CHURCH

Everybody likes to listen to a good story. A good story, well told, thrills the heart and quickens the mind. Many a god sermon has failed to move the listeners because of the lack of a heart thrilling story.

The pastor of the Methodist church, Rev. George Woodall, knows the value of a good story in illustrating the Gospel message, and uses many of them to emphasize the lesons of the sermons he preaches.

We are informed that in connection with next Sunday evening's sermon he will tell three thrillers, viz.: "What the Treasure Hunters Found," "An Eagle on a Cake of Ice Drifting Toward Niagara Falls," and "The Story of the Iron Wolf."

FIFTY ATTEND MEETING OF CROCKER-PERSHING P. T. A.

The Crocker-Pershing P. T. A. held a very interesting meeting last Tuesday afternoon at the Pershing school on Hanover street. Fifty members and friends attended the meeting, and twelve new members were enrolled. Mrs. I. Alexander, vice-president, presided.

After the business meeting the following program was enjoyed:

Recitation by Kathryn Douglas.

Recitation, "Santa's Trail," by Helen Campbell.

Recitation by Frances Welch.

A talk was then given by Mrs. Cleary on P. T. A. work that was very interesting as well as instructive.

LOCAL BUILDING CHANGES HANDS

Another tribute to the rapid growth of Daly City in the recent past took place last week, by the acquisition by William Haerdter, genial proprietor of the Relish Bakery, of the Poket building, next door to his present place of business.

"Bill," as he is familiarly known to all and sundry, has done much in the introduction of modern business and up to the minute surroundings to bring Daly City's business section to its present high standard, and we feel that the further extension of his holdings here will be manifested in a still greater improvement in Mission street in the near future. We congratulate Mr. Haerdter on his purchase, and we congratulate Daly City on the type of progressive men in its midst.

OUTDOOR CHRISTMAS TREE AT CITY HALL

In line with the announcement last week that a Christmas tree celebration will be held in front of the City Hall, the committtee in charge, Councilmen A. J. Bodien, Henry Sundermann and T. P. Moran, announce that work has begun on a program, it being expected that the celebration this year will draw an even greater attendance that that of last year, which proved a pronounced success.

The committee requests that all who wish to take part in the program, and in any way assist in making this annual celebration a splendid success, get in touch with the committeemen at once. It is hoped that the program may be announced in the next issue of the Record.

POSTMEN PLEADING FOR EARLY MAILING

As the holiday season draws near, the Daly City postmaster and the members of the post office staff are earnestly hoping that all residents of this city will mail their Christmas packages as early as possible, and not wait until the last minute. By mailing your packages early, you will not only give the postal officials a chance to complete their work in the alloted time, but you will be sure that your packages will reach their destination in time for the Christmas day celebration.

The air mail is now a great help in moving the mail of the nation in record time, and you should avail yourself of this privilege.

But, whatever you do, do not wait until the last minute to mail your messages of the Christmas time. Just remember, the boys in the postal service are entitled to some of the joys of the season, and you should help them by heeding their request for early mailing.

METHODIST SUNDAY SCHOOL CHRISTMAS CELEBRATION

The children and young people of the Methodist church will celebrate Christmas in an unusual way on Sunday evening, December 23. An excellent program is being prepared in which both the children will take part and the young people will present a pageant, in connection with which "White Gifts for the King" will be received. These gifts will consist of money, toys, children's clothing (especially for small children), groceries, canned goods and fruits and vegetables. The toys and children's clothing must be new. These gifts will be made by the Sunday school scholars and the entire congregation in appreciation of God's bounty during the year. The gifts will be distributed among the various local Methodist charitable institutions.

ENTERTAIN FIFTY FRIENDS IN HONOR OF BIRTHDAY

Mr. and Mrs. R. B. Young, of San Bruno avenue, San Francisco, and Mr. Robert Young, of 239 Evergreen avenue, entertained fifty of their friends at a party on last Saturday evening, at the latter's home, in honor of the birthdays of Robert Young, of Evergreen avenue, and his Nephew, Robert Young, of San Bruno avenue.

The lower floor was very tastily decorated in the holiday colors, green and red. Music was furnished for dancing by a three piece orchestra. The party was continued until the early hours of the morning, everyone present reporting having had a most enjoyable time.

PASSING OF BELOVED WOMAN

It was with much sorrow that the many friends of Mrs. Lillie McColl, of Gambetta street, learned of her death in San Francisco last Wednesday. Mrs. McColl was the beloved wife of Charles A. McColl and the mother of Roy R., Elmer A., James S. and Merwin R. Harrison, and the loving sister of William B. Woodland. She was a native of Woodland, California. She was Past President of Seven Pines Circle No. 3, Ladies of G. A. R., Mohican Council No. 42, D. of L., and Past Pocahontas Association. The funeral will be held this Saturday, December 8. Interment will be at Cypress Lawn Memorial Park.

P. T. A. POSTPONES PARTY

A meeting of the executive board of the Jefferson Union High P. T. A. was held Wednesday evening at the home of the Vice-President, Mrs. Gehringer, several important subjects being disucssed. It was decided to postpone the second of the series of whist parties that are being held by the association, and which was to have been held this Friday night, because of the Senior play at the high school. However, this whist party will be held next Friday night, December 14, at Company No. 3 fire house, on Westlake avenue.

THE LACK OF FUNDS WILL PREVENT ROAD WORK THIS WINTER

According to news contained in a letter from B. B. Meek, director of the department of public works, read before the San Mateo county board of supervisors last Monday, the California Highway Commission will be unable to aid San Mateo county in finding work for unemployed men during the winter season through road building and maintenace in this county. The letter came in answer to a request from the supervisors that the state aid in finding winter work for men without jobs, by employing them in the highway service.

Mr. Meek explained that the commission is expending budgeted sums for road work here, notably the Skyline and Bay Shore boulevards, running into big sums of money.

It was stated that no more money will be available until July 1, 1929. Meek stated that he was doing his best to employ men throughout the state during the winter by letting paving and maintenance contracts in the fall.

The board did not quote the unemployment situation as "serious" in San Mateo county, but some time ago went on record as wishing to aid employment.

A contract for the construction of a concrete auto bridge to be known either as the Crystal Springs bridge or the San Mateo Creek bridge, in the rear of Sawyer's camp, west of San Mateo, was awarded to Frank Bryant. Out of ten bids, Bryant's was the lowest, $3,120. That of C. C. Gildersleeve was next, $3,250.

The board was informed that San Francisco has a "waiting list" of patients for its Farm near Redwood City for the treatment of tuberculosis, and in view of the fact that the preventorium was already overcrowded it could not admit any more patients from San Mateo county.

Dr. W. C. Hassler of the San Francisco board of health, in his message to the board, stated that there are ten San Mateo patients in the preventorium, for whom the county had paid only $380 in costs. The letter was ordered filed, the board declining to take action at Monday's session.

A 25-foot strip of land between the Woodside road and Selby lane extension near Menlo Park was deeded to the county by the Owners' Realty Company of San Francisco.

FORMER COUNTY TREASURER PASSES AFTER LONG ILLNESS

Philander Perrigan Chamberlain, for forty-four years county treasurer of San Mateo county, Republican leader, and one of the most widely known men in San Mateo county, passed away at 7:45 o'clock last Friday morning, at the Sequoia Hotel, Redwood City, he having been seriously ill for the past eleven weeks. His death had been expected by his physician and life-long friend, Dr. J. L. Ross, and his great circle of friends. Since the previous Monday night he had been unconscious and the end had been expected hourly.

County officials and pioneers from all parts of the Peninsula gathered at Redwood City on Sunday to pay their final tribute to the beloved official and pioneer, Indian fighter and Masonic leader, and among the earliest of pioneer merchants. Impressive funeral rites of the Masonic order marked the service in Redwood City at 3 o'clock. The body was laid to rest in Cypress Lawn cemetery, Lawndale. Mr. Chamberlain had been a member of the Redwood City lodge since 1869, and was also a charter member of the George S. Evans Post, G. A. R., organized 50 years ago.

FIREMEN OF COUNTY PLAN ANNUAL DANCE SATURDAY

The Associated Firemen of San Mateo County have completed all arrangements for their annual dance, to be held this Saturday night, December 8, at the Pacific City Pavilion, Pacific City. All fire chiefs of the county will be on the floor committee, and Chief of Police Burke of San Mateo will provide adequate policing to assure a good, clean dance. The association is raising funds for a campaign for better fire protection, the organization of fire districts in unorganized sections of the county, and an intensive fire prevention campaign during 1928, and also arranging to send members to the fire school in San Francisco. Ten per cent of the proceeds of all functions given by the association goes toward the widows' and orphans' fund. The admission to the dance will be $1, with ladies free. Refreshments will be served.

The Asociated Firemen of San Mateo county was organized five years ago, and its sole object is the betterment of conditions in fire fighting and fire prevention work in San Mateo county.

MOTOR VEHICLE CODE AMENDMENTS RECEIVE OFFICIALS' APPROVAL

Many important amendments to the state motor vehicle code, proposed to increase safety and facilitate traffic, have been approved for hecommendation to the legislature by the executive committee of the Motor Vehicle Conference, a group of state officials and representatives of motoring and traffic organizations headed by Percy E. Towne, a director of the California State Automobile Association. The conference sponsored the original California vehicle act, and has recomended to subsequent legislatures refinements in the code to keep pace with modern conditions. Its executive committee has practically completed the task of weeding out the many suggested changes in the law and of the amendments scheduled for adoption by the conference, the more important ones are summarized by the legal department of the State Automobile Association as follows:

The right of way rule has been clarified to provide substantially as follows: When a vehicle has entered the intersection first, it shall be entitled to the right of way. When two vehicles enter an intersection at the same time, the driver of the vehicle on the left shall yield to the driver on the right. The driver of a vehicle within an intersection intending to turn left shall yield to any vehicle aproaching from the opposite direction which is within the intersection, or so close thereto as to constitute an immediate hazard, but said driver having so yielded and having given a signal as required by law may make such left turn and other vehicles approaching said intersection from said opposite direction shall yield to the driver making the left turn.

Upon approaching a through highway boulevard, the driver of a vehicle who has come to a complete stop as required by law, shall yield the right of way to other vehicles within the intersection or approaching so closely from the left as to constitute an immediate hazard, but said driver having so yielded may proceed and other vehicles approaching the intersection from the left or right shall yield to the vehicle so proceeding into or across the through highway or boulevard. A driver of a vehicle entering a public highway from a private road, or drive, shall yield to all vehicles approaching on said public highway. The driver of a vehicle shall yield the right of way to any authorized police or fire department vehicle when such vehicles are operated upon official business, and the driver thereof sounds audible signal by siren.

The section pertaining to a person driving a motor vehicle while under the influence of intoxicating liquor or narcotic drugs is recommended to be changed, making the offense under one set of circumstances a felony. If a person drives a motor vehicle while under the influence of intoxicating liquor, but does not cause bodily injury to any person, such offense is a misdemeanor. If, on the other hand, he drives a motor vehicle while in such a condition and causes bodily injury to any person, the offense is a felony. The reason for this change is to make it easier to obtain convictions in the majority of cases involving this offense where no bodily injury is incurred.

ANOTHER CONTINENT REACHED BY 'PHONE

Another continent was linked with the vast network of telephone lines that connect America with Continental Europe when trans-Atlantic telephone service was extended to all telephones in Spain and to Ceuta in Spanish Morocco, Africa, on November 26. Ceuta is reached from Spain by means of a submarine cable across the Straits of Gibraltar.

Extension of telephone service from America to the shores of the Mediterranean brings vividly to mind the striking contrast of methods of communication, ancient and modern. Spanish navigators who visited the Pacific Coast during the sixteenth century returned to Spain with their accounts of adventure and discovery only after months and in some cases years of hazardous ocean and land travel. Today, communication with that country from the Pacific Coast is instantaneous.

Spain has approximately 141,500 telephones, serving a population of 22,450,000.

Mike Hass decided that women buy from women more readily than from men, so he dressed in female attire and peddled wearing apparel from house to house in New Orleans with considerable success. A policeman observed the size of Mike's hands and feet and landed him in jail.

A life-size statute erected in California bears the inscription: "Here lived and gave her service to mankind, Sergis Pietrtie Prospect, world's champion milk cow; born 1913, died 1925."

RIGID INSPECTION OF OUTGOING VESSELS

A Federal inquiry for the purpose of fixing responsibility for the sinking of an ocean liner of English registry has been occupying much space in the press and in the public thought. At the present writing nothing conclusive has been determined, owing to a mass of conflicting statements and the evidence of animus on the part of some of the passengers and crew of the ill-fated vessel, whose lives were saved only after they had suffered agonies, mental and physical, severe exposure to wind and wave, and loss of property.

Through the testimony of many witnesses called upon to appear ran a poignant note, a sinister indictment, that the vessel was not seaworthy, the crew apparently inexperienced, the life boats lacked supplies, and were themselves leaky and unfit. Other witnesses laid the blame to the captain of the vessel, citing his failure to send out S. O. S. calls when trouble first developed, his apparent lack of seamanship in a crisis, his indecision in the fact of calamity, etc. Then there were stories of mutiny among the crew, especially on the part of certain negro members, who not only flatly refused to obey the orders of superiors but waxed belligerent and seemed to think only of saving their own lives, even at the sacrifice of those of the passengers.

American citizens were aboard—some of them were lost—and before the final chapter of this grim tragedy is written the public may be appalled to a far greater extent than at present.

It is not for this writer to attempt to fix responsibility, nor to offer advice along nautical lines that would have saved the ocean greyhound—this must be determined by a careful summing up of all testimony, and the Federal commission at New York has literally taken off its coat, rolled up its sleeves, and is prepared for a good, sound overhauling of the entire matter.

If the sinking of the Vestris has been productive of a more rigid inspection of outgoing vesels, it will not have been in vain. How inspectors can O. K. a vessel that has been sworn to be leaky, unsound, and poorly supplied, is beyond our comprehension. Certain of the crew declared that the vessel's ports and doors were faulty and had been on previous voyages, shipping quantities of water. According to the stories of some of the passengers, the life boats were not supplied with proper lamps, flares or other regulation equipment. According to the majority of all the witnesses examined, the captain did not resort to appealing for aid by radio until the vessel had actually started to sink, when aid could have easily been summoned twenty-four hours earlier.

Does it require a fearful toll of life to impress upon a seemingly credulous public that inspection of all vessels is imperative and should be rigidly enforced? Is human life to be regarded so cheaply that boats of sieve-like propensities are permitted to roam the high seas—just taking a chance at getting safely to port?

Following every calamity, such as theatre fire, railroad wreck, ship disaster, etc., there is a flurry of excitement and ordinances are enacted thick and fast to prevent a recurrence of a case of this particular type. Safety devices are installed, belated inspections are hurried up, and every thing is serene—until the next accident.

It is not enough to install safety devices. It is of importance to inspect this equipment frequently—for life belts have been known to deterioate, life boats have developed imperfections, signal flares are not supposed to last indefintely, nor will ship lanterns function properly unless regularly filled with oil and trimmed.

Prevention is a significant word—and our world will be a happier and healthier place in which to liive when ship and rail authorities place upon human life its proper value. "Be Prepared," that excellent motto of the Boy Scouts, should be framed and hung in every ship's wheelhouse, every locomotive cab, in fact it should be the standing rule of every common carrier that has the safety of human beings in its keeping. NEW DALY CITY THEATRE BRIGHTEST SPOT IN TOWN

Daly City is unanimous in its apparent approval of the new Daly City Theatre, which has been the "brightest spot in town" ever since the dedication ceremonies of November 27th.

In line with the theatre's slogan, "See it Better for Less at the Daly City," Messrs. Baron and Nathan today announce another program of selected attractions for the week commencing Saturday.

Ann Hoffman's clever kiddies will appear both at the matinee and evening performances Saturday. On the screen for the day only will be Bryant Washburn in "Skinner's Big Idea," one of the famous stories by Henry Irving Dodge. The plot involves an attempt to rejuvenate a firm that has gone to seed. The method is to hire a chorus girl who makes the old-timers wake up and spruce up with the desired result that they become go-getters for business.

Sunday brings a circuit vaudeville bill of four acts which will be presented both afternoon and evening on a continuous schedule from 1:45 until 11 o'clock. James Oliver Curwood's story, "The Slaver," will be shown Sunday, with Pat O'Malley and Carmelita Geraghty in the principal roles. It is a story of the sea and of a girl who defies her mother's warning and goes out to see life before she marries.

"Night Life," a story of Vienna, will bring its gripping scenes to the Daly City screen Monday. Its scenes are laid in the period before the war, during the war and after the armistice. Among the many players in the cast are Alice Day, Johnny Harron, Eddie Gribbon and Walter Hiers.

Tuesday's screen feature will be "A Midnight Adventure," starring Cullen Landis and Edna Murphy.

Wednesday the attraction will be Helene Chadwick and Lillian Rich in "Dancing Days," with Nina Frellson's Dancing Juveniles for the stage feature. "Temptations of a Shop girl will be shown Thursday in addition to Jack Dempsey in "No Picnic."

SAME PRESCRIPTION HE WROTE IN 1892

When Dr. Caldwell started to practice medicine, back in 1875, the needs for a laxative were not as great as today. People lived normal lives, ate plain, wholesome food, and got plenty of fresh air. But even that early there were drastic physics and purges for the relief of constipation which Dr. Caldwell did not believe were good for human beings.

The prescription for constipation that he used early in his practice, and which he put in drug stores in 1892 under the name of Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin, is a liquid vegetable remedy, intended for women, children and elderly people, and they need just such a mild, safe bowel stimulant.

This prescription has proven its worth and is now the largest selling liquid laxative. It has won the confidence of people who needed it to get relief from headaches, biliousness, flatulence, indigestion, loss of appetite and sleep, bad breath, dyspepsia, colds, fevers. At your druggist, or write "Syrup Pepsin," Dept. BB, Monticello, Illinois, for free trial bottle.

Possibility of Radio in Forestry Service

Experiments are being made to determine the value of the radio in the forestry service. While radio communication under ordinary conditions is fairly reliable no one knows whether it can be made to work under the national forest conditions, where low power radio waves will be affected by absorption by trees and the reflecting influence or rough topography. Anyone will appreciate the desirability of a radio set light enough to be carried on a man's back with his emergency rations, enabling a fireman when he reaches a fire to inform headquarters either that he does or does not need help. Whether this extreme requirement for lightness can be met is uncertain; but it now appears reasonably sure that a low-power, code-transmitting and voice-receiving set can be developed that will be light enough to be packed on a horse and sturdy and simple enough to be used in this service.

Rowland was convicted of murdering Elgar Morrison, a fellow convict at Folsom Prison. The jury deliberated less than forty-five minutes and the entire trial occupied only nine hours.

Attempts to muzzle the blazing Belleview gasser at Santa Fe Springs by dropping a huge inverted funnel over the mouth of the roaring inferno failed when the tremendous flow of gas tossed the four-ton steel funnel aside as though it were made of straw. A crew of men wearing asbestos suits and working in three-minute shifts held guywires while a huge traveling crane dropped the funnel over the blaze.

The special legislative committee appointed by Governor Young to outline a program for state water conservation for submission to the next Legislature conducted an executive session in the Governor's San Francisco offices, at the conclusion of which announcement was made that work on proposed legislation will be inaugurated at once. What the nature of the program will be was not divulged, but the committee's legal advisers differed considerably in oral arguments to the members.

The Tioga road, connecting Yosemite valley and Mono lake, and crossing the highest mountain pass in the state, is closed for the year, and probably will not be open to automobile traffic until the latter part of June or the first of July, 1929, according to information from James Lloyd, information ranger of Yosemite National Park. Snow is falling in the high Sierras above the 7000-foot elevation and all indications point to a very heavy snowfall during the ensuing winter. The All-Year road into Yosemite valley is the only advisable route at the present time as both the Big Oak Flat and the Wawona roads into the valley have been closed temporarily by heavy rains, according to the National Automobile Club. These roads may open again with favorable weather, but this is problematical.

It is expected that preliminary work will begin shortly on the $25,000,000 San Gabriel dam, said to be one of the greatest engineering undertakings in the world. The successful bidders will be required to give bonds in the sum of $1,000,000 to insure faithful construction, completion and payment for materials and labor. Contract for the main construction job was awarded to the lowest of six bidders by the board of supervisors. The accepted bid of $11,250,000 was said to be three-quarters of a million dollars less than the next lowest. An average force of 1800 to 2500 men is expected to be at work during the five years necessary to complete the structure. Later the bids will be advertised for about 4,000,000 barrels of cement, and this will probably stimulate the cement industry in Southern California.

Inclusion of the entire route from the Colorado river to Riverside in the secondary road system of Southern California will be asked by Riverside County when the program of the thirteen southern counties is outlined for presentation to the State Legislature. Although the matter of including the Inland route to San Diego from Riverside in the secondary state highway road system was considered, it was held that this route, although important to the two counties, would not be of as much benefit at present to the entire county of Riverside as the other route.

BROOKLYN NEEDS FIELD STRENGTH

Talk Trade of Dazzy Vance for Better Players.

Two factions of the Brooklyn baseball club are at present trading arguments as to the wisdom of parting with Dazzy Vance, the strike-out king of National league pitchers, in exchange for a bundle of currency and some players.

One faction of the club holds that Vance is the backbone of the team. The other asserts that the retention of the star pitcher will not improve Brooklyn's prospects for the 1929 season because the team doesn't amount to much outside of the pitcher's box.

Brooklyn could get more in cash and players for Vance right now than any other club could obtain for any other pitcher in the United States—and it is not certain at that whether Vance is still in his best vigor.

Petty, the southpaw star, would like to get away. If a trade can be made for Petty there is at least one club that will take him—the Pittsburgh Pirates. Manager Donie Bush of Pittsburgh regards Petty as one of the best left-handers in baseball. Pittsburgh is in need of a high-class left-hander who can help the Pirates swing along next year to their attempt to beat St. Louis and Chicago in the West and New York in the East.

Brooklyn cannot get for Petty of course, what it could get for Vance. Two or three seasons ago the Brooklyn club was urged to trade Vance for George Kelly and a pile of coin but would not do so, although in that season it was plainly evident that Brooklyn had nothing but pitchers.

Petty and Elliott faltered somewhat in 1928 but McWeeny was better than ever and young William Watson Clark proved to be more than a mere promise. Despite that, Brooklyn would not have been as well off in pitching if Vance had not won from some National league clubs with great decisiveness. He did best of all against Boston, pitching six winning games against that demoralized team. He won one from the Phillies and lost one, which was the most surprising result of all. From the Giants, Dazzy won three games while losing two. The St. Louis Cardinals lost three games to him and won but two.

Vance's really greatest feat in 1928 was against the Chicago Cubs. He won five games from the Cubs and lost one of them—and that, with the nonsuccess of the Cubs against the Phillies, is reason enough why the Chicago team did not win the pennant this year.

Harry Heilmann Is More Valuable at First Base

Harry Heilmann is more valuable at first base than in the outfield, writes H. C. Salsinger of the Detroit News.

He is a better fielder and, since he was switched to the position, has batted better.

It was Samuel Crawford who first pointed out that a big man is better at first than in the outfield.

There are few chances in the outfield, and the big man, much slower than the smaller outfielders, finds it difficult to start quickly after being relaxed for comparatively long periods of time. It is more difficult for him to spring into a play.

There is little relaxation at first base. The man playing the position is kept fairly much on the move, and big men, unable to relax at first, remain attuned.

Crawford, who hated to play first base, admitted he could do much better there than in right field, where his play was slow and cumbersome.

Heilmann, who has no such dislike for first base play, does much better there than he ever did in the outfield.

Giants Get Leach

Fred Leach, Philadelphia National's outfielder, who was made a member of the New York Giants in the first trade of the hot-stove league season, which sent Frank ("Lefty") Odoul to the lowly Philadelphia team. Leach has never hit below .300 since he has been in the majors. He joined the Phillies in 1925.

Big League Season to Open One Week Later

Under present plans, the major league baseball campaigns will start a week later in 1929 than they did this year. John Heydler, president of the National league, said it was expected to open the season in both leagues on April 16 and close on September 29.

The 1928 season opened on April 11 and closed September 29, but weather conditions, especially in the East, canceled any advantage there might have been in the early opening.

John's Mother Praises Doctor

There isn't a mother living who won't agree that no half-sick child should be the subject for an experiment with medicines of uncertain merit. When your child is bilious, headachy, half-sick, feverish, restless, with coated tongue, bad breath, no appetite or energy, you know that nine times out of ten it's a sign his little stomach and bowels need purging. And when you know that for over fifty years leading physicians have endorsed one preparation for this condition, there doesn't seem to be any reason for "trying" things.

Rich, fruity California Fig Syrup clears the little stomach and bowels gently, harmlessly and in a hurry. It regulates the bowels, gives tone and strength to them and to the stomach; and helps to give your child new strength, energy and vitality. Thousands of Western mothers praise it. Mrs. Joseph W. Hill, 4306 Bedford Ave., Omaha, Nebraska, says: "I'll never forget the doctor who got me to give my baby boy, John, California Fig Syrup. Nothing else seemed to help his weak bowels. That was when he was just a baby. He suffered a good deal before I gave him Fig Syrup, but it stopped his trouble quick. I have used it with him for colds and little upset spells ever since. I consider him a Fig Syrup boy."

Insist on the genuine article. See that the carton bears the word "California." Over four million bottles used a year.

Will nature provide the pressures necessary to smash the atom?

Three German scientists experimenting in Switzerland hope to attain pressures up to 30,000,000 volts. They use a wide-meshed wire net having an area of 700 square yards. This is hung between two mountain peaks at a height of about 250 feet, and is supported by long chains of insulators. In a lightning-proof metal hut there is a spark gap which can be lengthened until the electrodes are 15 feet apart. One of the electrodes is connected with the wire net aerial, and during a storm the sparks jump across the gap at the rate of about one per second.

LET US BE THANKFUL

Thanksgiving day was observed as a matter of course, but it is doubtful that many really stopped to consider how much we who live in the year 1928 really have to be thankful for.

Only by comparing our condition with that of our ancestors may we realize what our present-day civilization really means.

Two or three centuries ago only the aristocrats had any material comforts to speak of. The average person toiled long hours to earn the barest necessities of life, with no luxuries. Few had sufficient food or clothing. Disease was unchecked and suffering was unrelieved. Education was denied to the great mass of the population, while the natural aspirations of mankind were stifled.

During all the centuries the great majority were born to virtual enslavement of both body and mind, through the domination of cruel masters and rulers. Human beings were shown less consideration than beasts, and human life was held as the world's cheapest commodity.

How different today, although man's inhumanity to man still causes much suffering. At least we have emerged from barbarism and there is more of sympathy and charity and helpfulness in the world than ever before.

The working man of today has luxuries not dreamed of in the past. He has ample clothing, shelter and food. Many have automobiles and a radio set. He may enjoy the movies and other amusements. Books, newspapers and magazines are within his reach.

As a recent writer has said: "The truth is, we are all living in luxury, a very grand form of luxury, as compared with conditions in every other country, or with conditions that existed in this country even a few decades ago."

For all these blessings we should be thankful, not only on Thanksgiving day, but on every day in the year.

FEDERAL MUCK-RAKERS

At its recent convention in New Orleans the National Association of Railroad and Utilities Commissioners again went on record as opposing Federal interference with state regulation of public utilities.

These commissioners are elected by the people of their respective states, and are therefore responsive to the will of the electorate in all matters pertaining to their important duties. This being the case, the commissioners feel that their own constituents, and not politicians in Congress, should be the judges of the manner in which the matters coming under their jurisdiction are handled.

Lewis E. Gettle of the Wisconsin commission declared that recent interferences by Federal authorities indicated the "monumental ignorance of these august Senators" who seek to dictate to state officials. Commissioner Morgan of Alabama asserted that "these self-appointed rate experts in the United States Senate know as much about rates as a goat does about astronomy."

Resolutions which virtually voiced approval of these statements were unanimosuly passed by the attending commissioners, whose view appeared to be that much of the Federal muck-raking of which they complain is inspired by the ambitions of politicians in Congress, who have an eye to their own political future, rather than to any real public interest.

CABINET GUESSES

Politicians and newspaper men, and the public generally, seem busy picking President-elect Hoover's cabinet, just as they are guessing what President Coolidge and Governor Al Smith will do when their terms of office expire.

And here are some of the cabinet guesses: For Secretary of State, Ambassador Morrow or Senator Borah; for Secretary of the Treasury, Mellon, reappointed; for Attorney-General, "Wild Bill" Donovan, at present assistant; for Postmaster-General, New, reappointed, or Good,; for Secretary of Commerce, possibly Dr. Julius Klein, foreign trade expert. The rest not even guessed at. Some believe a Southern man will be given an important cabinet position.

Whether any of these guesses will prove correct is just another guess, because Mr. Hoover himself recently said:

"Any truthful declaration on the cabinet members will be announced by me, and all other statements will be based on theory and conjecture."

In the meantime, Mr. Hoover's tour of Central and South America will be a combination of business and pleasure —no small part of the pleasure being a temporary respite from the importunities of office seekers.

NEW FARM BILL

It is indicated that strong efforts will be made to pass a farm relief measure during the short session of Congress, although such an accomplishment is by no means certain. A new bill closely following the general lines of the McNary-Haugen measure is being worked out by Senator McNary, but it will eliminate the famous "equalization fee' feature, which has been the chief bone of contention in the past.

It is understood that the proposed bill will be primarily intended to extend co-operative marketing of crops through government loans to farm associations at a very low rate of interest. By this means, while the credit of the government will be available to assist the movement, the farm organizations will not be subject to Federal control to the extent proposed by the equalization fee plan.

Regardless of the details of the plan which may be finally adopted, if is safe to say that the benefits to be derived from it will depend to a large extent upon the measure of co-operation accorded by the farmers themselves.

In fact, the whole farm problem is greatly influenced by the inability of farm leaders to form a really effective farm organization, and the failure of these leaders to agree among themselves respecting the best method of meeting the existing situation.

Therefore, the wise farmer will do some earnest thinking and planning cincerning his own operations, and will not depend too much on the promises of politicians.

ISSUES BEFORE CONGRESS

Many important questions that should receive attention at the present session of the Seventieth Congress face our national law-makers. Discussion of farm relief, Muscle Shoals, Boulder Canyon Dam, the tariff and the Merchant Marine will probably occupy the spotlight during the short session. It is generally believed that the Senate will ratify the Kellogg peace treaty to which sixty nations have announced their willingness to adhere, as well as take some action on the cruiser bill. Public opinion is thought to favor strong defense forces as a means to preserve peace.

In respect to farm relief, Senator McNary announced recently that he has prepared a bill, similar to the McNary-Haugen bill, except for the exclusion of the equalization fee. And Representative Longworth of Ohio, Speaker of the House, has expressed the opinion that it will be possible to enact farm relief legislation during this session.

Senator King of Utah, in a recent discussion with President Coolidge on Boulder Dam legislation, stated that he was "opposed to the whole Boulder Dam scheme." He predicted, however, that legislation in some form relative to the project would be passed during the short session.

A FARM BOY'S ADVICE

"Only in union is there strength, and the farmers must co-operate in the marketing of their products if they intend to advance and prosper."

This sound admonition is a sentence from the prize essay by 16-year-old Russell Walters of Clinton, Oklahoma, winner of the first award in a south-wide contest by the American Cotton Growers' Exchange, in which about 10,000 boys and girls partcipated. The subject of the essays was "Co-operative marketing as it affects the cotton farmer."

The advice given by young Walters applies with equal force to all farmers, whether they raise cotton or some other crop. While much progress in co-operative marketing has been made in recent years, the movement is yet in its infancy. An extension of the practice to all farmers would go a long way toward solving one of the most important problems of agriculture.

Now, wouldn't it make a mess if those presidential electors took a notion to bolt?

FOODS FROM WOOD

It is now possible to chemically transform wood into food on a commercial scale, acording to Dr. Bergius, the noted German chemist, now visiting America.

He states that through researches covering the last twelve years, carbohydrates suitable for human consumption have been artifically produced from wood. Cattle feed has also been made from material heretofore wasted on the farm.

Dr. Bergius is one of the world's greatest chemists and is the discoverer of a process for making synthetic gasoline from coal, which has given him international fame. Much of the experimental work done in connection with his gasoline process has been of value in his food experiments.

Patient work of scientists in the laboratories of the world is daily bearing fruit in new discoveries which tend to eliminate wasteful methods and increase the usefulness of raw materials. So rapid are these developments that many industrial practices of one decade become obsolete in the next, and expensive plants must be scrapped to make way for those that are new and more efficient. But that is the price of progress.

HAIR-SPLITTERS AGAIN

Having nothing better to do, perhaps, some of our pedants are amusing themselves by criticizing the use of certain words in common use, and in drawing hair-splitting distinctions with respect to their meaning. For example, the words "candidate" and "president-elect."

The purists declare that when a person announces himself as an aspirant for office he becomes a candidate, but after receiving a regular nomination for the place he is no longer a candidate, but a "nominee." Again, they say that it is wrong at present to refer to Mr. Hoover as the "president-elect," because he has not yet been formally elected by the electoral college.

All of which will appear to practical people as being rather trivial, just as is this comment of ours.

THE OTHER HOOVER

Few persons outside of Washington know that there is already a Hoover attached to the White House, and has been for a good while. Irvin H. Hoover, chief usher, who has served for thirty-two years, came to the executive mansion during the latter part of Cleveland's last administration, and has been there ever since.

He has the important duty of receiving the president's callers, and ushering them into the executive's presence, besides performing many other services around the White House, where he is said to be considered indispensable.

Recently when reminded that it would be odd for him to serve a president also named Hoover, he cautiously replied that possibly the new president would think one Hoover on the job was enough. Because of his long service, efficiency and good record, there is little doubt, however, that he will be retained in his present capacity indefinitely, or retired on a pension.

A woman shedding tears was the first practical waterproof development.

CONTEMPT FOR LAW

During 1926 and 1927, 760 murders were recorded in one American metropolis. Of these, 130 were gang killings. Yet not a single men responsible for any of the gang murders was punished, and in 104 of the cases no arrests whatever were made.

In the same city, since 1922, a so-called "beer war" has taken 375 lives, in addition to the deaths of 160 gangsters by the police. This would seem to be a record, but other American cities are not far behind. Practically every great center of population has its frequent gang war casualties and its unexplained murders.

The pitiful inadequacy of the means used to "prevent" these outrages is apparent. We even pass laws which in practice permit only the criminal to bear arms.

Professional reformers make martyrs of the principals in sensational cases, and assisted by pardon, parole and commutation of sentence laws, help them to get "another chance." In the majority of instances, these "chances" come to the thief or the murderer as golden opportunities to continue his criminal career.

Through legal technicalities cases are dragged out over interminable periods of time, often resulting in the circumvention of justice. And, after convictions, punishment is delayed through the avenue of "appeals."

Crime repression will come when an awakened and active public consciousness causes changes in our legal routine that will permit the free, unhampered machinery of justice to function, and not until then. We do not need more laws, but less.

Through our own incompetence, we have given the modern criminal a contempt for law and authority and society. When this contempt is changed to respect we will have solved our crime problem.

SYNOPSIS

Events of the story as set forth in the journal of William A. Porter, professor of English literature:

The professor's uncle, Horace Porter, died mysteriously at his home, Twin Hollows, now the professor's property. Jane, the professor's wife, is a psychic. She insists Uncle Horace, dead for a year, had attended his class reunion and produces a snapshot to prove her contention. Professor Cameron, interested in psychical research, inclines to the idea of psychic photography.

A mild term, that, for Jane's feeling about the house. Actually, she hates it. Has always hated it. She has had no pride in our acquisition of it; she has even steadfastly refused to bring away from it any of that early American furniture with which old Horace had filled it.

Yet she collects early American furniture. I write tonight at an utterly inadequate early American desk, because of this taste of hers. And yet she will have none of Uncle Horace's really fine collection.

Nor is she of the type to listen to Annie Cochran's story that the old portion of the house is haunted by the man killed there.

(Note: An old story and not authenticated, of the shooting of a man many years ago as he hid to escape the excise. As a matter of fact, none of our later experiences in the house bore out this particular tradition at all.)

If she has a distaste for it, it may possibly relate to the occupancy of the house by the Riggs woman before Uncle Horace bought it. But even here I am doubtful, for Mrs. Riggs was caught in most unblushing fraud and entirely discredited as a medium.

June 21.

Edith is back. She came in this morning, kissed Jock, Jane and myself, Jock first, demanded an enormous breakfast and all the hot water in the house, and descended gaily a half hour later to the table.

"Well," she said, attacking her melon, "and when do we go to the haunted house?"

"Ask your aunt."

She glanced at me and then shrewdly at Jane.

"Good heavens!" she said. "Don't tell me there's any question about it?"

"It isn't decided yet," Jane said uneasily. "It's a big house, Edith and—"

"All the more reason for taking it," said Edith, and having finished her melon flung out her pretty arms. "Grass," she said, "and flowers, and the sea. I shall swim," she went on. "And old Father William shall fish, and Jane shall sew a fine seam. And at night the ghosts shall walk. And everything will be lovely."

She turned to me.

"You do believe in ghosts, don't you, Father William?"

And somehow even Jane caught some of the infection of her gayety. "Ask him about the triangle in a circle," she said.

"What's that?" Edith inquired.

"The triangle in a circle, drawn around you, will keep off demons," I explained gravely. "Surely you know that?"

"How—convenient!"

"And that the skins of four frogs, killed on a moonless night, will make one invisible if worn as a cap? And that the spirits obey Soloman's seal—not the plant, of course! And that if you eat a stew of the eyes of a vulture, and the ear-tufts of an owl, you will be wise beyond all dreams of wisdom?"

Jane got up, and I saw that my nonsense had had its effect. She was smiling, for the first time in days.

"If you care to go out and look at the house tomorrow, William," she said, "I will go."

And perhaps Edith had sensed a situation she did not understand, for she kissed her, and as I left the room I heard her requesting Jane to bring back with her marketing some frog skins and the ear-tufts of an owl.

So this afternoon things are looking brighter. And thus does man deceive himself!

The town is very quiet tonight. The annual student exodus is almost over although still an occasional truck goes by, piled high with trunks. The Lears intend to stay. Sulzer and Macintyre are off for the Scottish lakes, and Cameron, I hear, is going soon to the Adirondacks, where he spends his summer in a boat, and minus ghosts, I dare say.

I have mailed him the picture today, and can only hope Jane does not miss it.

One wonders about men like Cameron. Slight, almost negligible, as is my acquaintance with him—I would not know him in a crowd, even now—there is something of Scottish dourness in him. He neither smokes nor drinks; he lives austerely and alone. He has a reputation as a relentless investigator; it was he who exposed the hauntings at the house on Sandbathday lake, in Massachusetts.

But he is a believer. That is, he believes in conscious survival after death, and I suspect that he has his own small group here. Among them little Pettingill. It would be a humiliating thought, for me, to feel that after I passed over, as they say, little Pettingill might hale me to him, in the light or a red lamp, and request me to lift a table!

Warren Halliday is on the veranda with Edith. I can hear her bubbling laughter, and his quiet, deep voice. After all, I dare say we must make up our minds to lose her some time, but it hurts.

And it will not be soon. He has not a penny to bless himself with, nor has she. I think, if I were very rich, I would provide an endowment fund for lovers.

But something is wrong with our university system. It takes too long to put a man on a wife-supporting basis. Halliday is twenty-six; he lost two years in the war, and he has another year of law. Truly, Edith will need the eyes of a vulture and the ear-tufts of an owl.

June 22.

All houses in which men have lived and suffered and died are "haunted houses." But then, all houses are haunted. Why, then, did Jock refuse to enter the house at Twin Hollows today, but crawled under the automobile and remained there, a picture of craven terror, until our departure?

Old Thomas, the gardener, met us in Oakville with the keys, and we drove out to the house. I sensed in Jane a reluctance to enter, but she fought it back bravely, and we examined it with a view to our own occupancy. It is in excellent condition and repair, although the white covers over the library furniture and in the den behind gave those rooms a rather ghostly appearance. Jane, I saw, gave only a cursory glance into those rooms, and soon after, pleading the chill inside, moved out into the sunlight.

Edith, however, was enchanted with it all, and said so. She danced through the house, shamelessly courting old Thomas, selecting bedrooms for us all, and peering into closets, and I caught up with her at last on the second floor, looking at the boat-house on the beach beyond the marsh.

"What's above it?" she asked. "Rooms?"

"When the old sloop was in commission, the captain slept there," I told her.

"How many rooms?"

"Two, I think, and a sort of kitchenette."

"Are they furnished?"

Old Thomas, being appealed to, said they were, and Edith's face assumed that air of mysterious calculation which I have learned to associate with what she calls "an idea." Whatever it was, however, she kept it to herself, and I left her selecting a bedroom for herself, and putting into it sufficient thought to have served a better purpose.

It is a curious thing to go into a house left, as Twin Hollows has been, without change since old Horace died and not to find him there; his big armchair near the fireplace in the library, his very pens still on the flat topped desk which is the only modern piece in the room, the books he was reading still in the desk rack. I had a curious feeling today that if I raised my voice, I would hear the little cough which was so often his preliminary to speech, from the den beyond.

I threw back the covering which protected the desk top and sat down at it. Just there, in all probability, he had been sitting when the fatal attack took place. He may have felt it coming on, but there was no one to call, poor old chap. We had not been overly close, but the thought of him, writing perhaps, or reading, the sudden consciousness that all was not well, an instant of comprehension, and then the end—it got me, rather.

I think he had been reading. Among the other books on the desk was the one with a scrap of paper thrust in it to mark the place, and a pencil line drawn on the margin of the page to mark a paragraph. But it gives me rather a new line on him. I had always thought that his purchase of a house locally reputed to be haunted, a reputation considerably enhanced by the Riggs woman's tenancy, was a rather magnificent gesture of pure Calvinism.

But tonight I am wondering. The marked paragraph is in a book entitled "Eugenia Riggs and the Oakville Phenomena," and I have brought it home with me. It is a creepy sort of thing, and I find myself looking back over my shoulder as I copy it into this record.

"It is to be borne in mind that the room was always subjected to the most careful preliminary examination. Its walls were plastered, and no doors or windows (see photograph) were near the cabinet. As an additional precaution strings of small bells were placed across all possible entrances and exits, which were also closed and locked.

"It is also to be remembered that the medium herself was always willing to be searched, and this was frequently done by Madame B——. This had been done on the night when the hand was distinctly seen by all present, reaching out and touching those nearest on the shoulder, and later making the impression in the pan of soft putty left in the cabinet.

"It is to be borne in mind, too, that, except when the controls rapped for no light, there was always sufficient illumination for use to see the medium clearly. A small red lamp was found to offer least disturbance and was customarily used.

"There was occasional fraud, but there were also genuine phenomena."

The last few words are italicized.

So tonight I am wondering. Does one find, as life goes on, that the lonely human spirit revolts at the thought of eternal peace, and craves a relief in action in the life beyond? Would I not myself, for instance, prefer even coming back and lifting little Pettingill's table to the unadulterated society of the saints?

June 23.

There is a division in my family. Edith has come out with her plan, which is to "spread out," as she puts it, in the main house at Twin Hollows, and to let Warren Halliday spend his vacation at the boat-house!

"Renting it to him, I suppose?" I inquired over my breakfast bacon.

"Renting it?" she said indignantly. "You wouldn't have the nerve to ask money for that tumble-down place,

So, Tonight, I Am Wondering.

would you? And anyhow, you can't get blood out of a stone."

There is a terrible frankness about Edith at times.

But Jane is as equally determined not to occupy the house at any cost. It was written all over her yesterday, and there is still an ominous set look about her mouth.

If Jane would be more open it would be easier; if she would only come to me and say that she is afraid of the house I think I could reassure her. It may be that that silly photograph is still in her mind. But why would she not even stay in the house yesterday? She went out into the garden and picked some of its neglected flowers instead.

"It's a pity not to use them," she said, and then looked at me with such a white and pitiful face that I put my arm around her.

"I must have been a very bad husband," I said, "if you think I am going to force you to live here. Who am I," I added, "against you and Jock?"

But she did not smile.

"If you want to come here," she said, making what I felt was a painful concession, "why couldn't we live at the Lodge? It is really quite sweet. And we could rent this."

"Would that be quite moral, under the circumstances? I'm not asking the circumstances," I added hastily. "I'm simply putting the question."

"We could ask a lower rent."

There is, I sometimes think, a fundamental difference in the ethical views of men and women. To Jane it is quite proper to let a house with what she believes is a most undesirable quality, if she lowers the price. She does not suggest advertising: "One house furnished, reputed to be haunted." On the contrary, she proposes to entice tenants with a lower rent, and once having got them there, to be able to say, in effect: "What would you? The house is cheap. True, it has certain disadvantages; I am sorry you have been bothered. But you have saved money."

Aside from this viewpoint, however, the idea is sound enough. We can be comfortable at the Lodge. And—let me always be frank in this Journal—I may have my occasional yearnings for adventure, but they have their limitations, and the talk Edith has reported as taking place between old Thomas and herself yesterday after I left them has revealed them to myself.

Edith, on the contrary, finds the situation "really thrilling."

"It's a good house, yes'm," said Thomas. "For them as likes it. I wouldn't be caught dead in it at night myself."

"I hope you never will be," said Edith.

"It ain't nothing you can put your finger on," said Thomas. "It's just knocks and raps, and doors opening and closing. But I say that's enough."

"It sounds like plenty," said Edith. "Of course it may be rats."

"It's a right husky rat that'll open a closed door, and I ain't yet seen a rat that could move a chair. Besides, I ain't ever heard that rats are partial to a red light."

"Now, see here, Thomas," Edith reports herself as saying, "either you've said too much or you've said too little. What about a red light?"

Stripped of further trimming, it appears that some two years ago a small red lamp was installed in the den at Twin Hollows, and is now still there. Thomas having declined to destroy it for fear of some dire and mysterious vengeance.

"Not for light, as far as I could see, miss," he said. "I never seen him read by it. But put in it was, and the night it first came Annie Cochran said something came into her room and pulled the covers off her bed."

"How—shameless!" said Edith.

Like the lady of color who said to the judge that she had "just sort of lost her taste" for her husband, I begin to lose my taste for this lamp. But one wonders whether its evil reputation is not a survival from the days of Mrs. Riggs, when "a small red lamp was found to offer least disturbance, and was customarily used."

June 24.

Edith has lost and Jane has won. We shall spend the summer at the Lodge.

But I feel that Jane's victory brings her no particular pleasure, that even to go to the Lodge is a concession she is making against some hidden apprehension.

Edith, however, has won in one way. Warren Haliday is to have the boat-house.

We motored out together today, I to look over the Lodge more carefully, and Halliday to inspect his prospective quarters. He is thoroughly likeable, a nice clean-cut young fellow, not too handsome but manly and with a good war record, and badly cut up at his failure to find a job for the summer.

"I'd do anything," he said. "Sell neckties if necessary! But I can't even land that. Although—" he forced a grin "—I have a nice taste in neckties!"

On the way out I told him something of the history of the house, and a little—very little—of Jane's nervousness concerning it.

In view of our conversation, it was interesting later that day, at the Lodge, to have old Thomas intimate that Uncle Horace had not died a natural death, but had "seen something" which had caused it.

As a matter of fact, he brought out certain rather curious facts, which appear to have been somehow overlooked, or at least considered unimportant, at the inquest.

For instance, he had been writing at his desk when the attack came on. His pen was found on the floor. But there was no sign of what he had been writing, save for a mark on the fresh blotter, as if he had blotted something there. The most curious thing, however, according to old Thomas, was the matter of lights.

When Annie Cochran found him the following morning, on the floor beside his desk, all the lights were out, including his desk lamp.

"But the red lamp was going in the den," said old Thomas. "It didn't make much light, so nobody noticed it until the doctor came. He saw it right off. I leave it to you, what shut off that desk lamp?"

I rather gather from Thomas that the ill-repute of the red lamp has spread over the countryside. The house had a bad reputation to start with, and now comes Annie Cochran and her red lamp, and a fairly poor outlook so far as renting the property is concerned.

The Lodge proves to be weatherproof and in good condition, and the boat-house quite livable, with the addition of a few things from the main house.

(Note: It is necessary, for the sake of the narrative, to describe the boat-house. It is built up on piles which raise it above tide level, and the dory and canoe belonging to the house are stored in the lower portion of it in winter. The old sloop, however, not in commission for several years, was at this time anchored to a buoy about a hundred yards out in the bay, and showed the buffetings of wind and tide.

Across the salt marsh, from the foot of the lawn, extended a raised wooden runway which led to the boat-house and the beach. This walk also prolongs itself into a sort of ramshackle pier, from which a runway extends to a wooden float. At the time of our visit examination showed the float badly in need of repair, a number of the barrels which supported it having more or less gone to pieces.

It was, as will be seen, during Halliday's repair of this float that he made that discovery which was later to see the commencement of my troubles.)

All in all, Jane's scheme is practical, although Edith is frankly disappointed.

"I would have looked so sweet on that terrace!" she says, and makes a dreadful face at me.

But she is secretly pleased. She sees herself in the cottage, in a bungalow apron, presenting a picture of lovely but humble domesticity to young Halliday, and thus forcing his hand. For if I know anything of Edith, she is going to marry him. And if I know anything of Halliday, he is going to marry nobody he cannot support.

It may be an interesting summer.

Curious about that lamp on the desk, the night the poor old chap passed out. Of course, he might have turned it out and risen to go upstairs when he felt the attack coming on. But wouldn't he have laid the pen down first? One would do that automatically.

It's a pity the blotting pad has been destroyed.

June 25.

The last, or almost the last, word Uncle Horace wrote the night of his death was "danger."

But how much significance am I to attach to that? To poor old Horace there would have been danger in overexertion; in that sense of the word he was always in danger. But it was not a word he was apt to use lightly.

Yet what conceivable danger could have threatened him? . . .

This morning, clearing my desk preparatory to our exodus, I resorted to an old trick of mine. I turned over my large desk blotter and presented a fresh and unblemished side to the world. It came to me then that thus probably since the invention of blotters had neatness been established with a minimum of effort, and that it might have been resorted to by Annie Cochran.

After luncheon I started to Twin Hollows with the back of the car piled high with a varied assortment of breakable toilet articles, a lamp or two, and a certain number of dishes. The Lodge was open, and Annie Cochran vigorously cleaning it, and having deposited my fragile load there, I wandered up to the house.

Gift Proved of Little Value to Lafayette

When General Lafayette visited America in 1824 congress, by act of December 28, 1824, granted him $200,000 and "one complete town of land" in recognition of his "services and sacrifices" during the Revolution. Pathfinder Magazine recalls. The land was to be located under the authority of the President "in any of the unappropriated lands of the United States." This location was made in what was then known as West Florida and embraced 23,028.50 acres covering part of what is now the city of Tallahassee. A patent for this land was issued on July 4, 1825, and was delivered to Lafayette in person by the commissioner of the general land office. A notice in the Pensacola Gazette of 1825 says that Colonel McKee arrived in Florida to select the land for the famous Frenchman. Lafayette never saw his Florida land. An attempt was made to colonize this tract by French settlers under Count La Porte, but the scheme was unsuccessful. A few years later Lafayette made another attempt at colonization. He sent Charles Murat, a son of the great cavalry general and Napoleon's sister, but he too failed. After Lafayette's death the land was sold by his heirs and it is now owned by a large number of different persons.

By Force of Habit

Jane is three years old and wise beyond her years. She is a great favorite with the grocer, who always contributes a sweetmeat on occasions that bring her to the store. Today he handed her some candy.

"What must you say to the man?" mother said, warning her daughter of the etiquette attached to the gift.

"Charge it," was the reply not new to the grocer.

In Mexico

Husbands in Mexico do not carry latch keys.

When they have been out late to the lodge they ring an electric bell or pound on a heavy wooden gate.

This wakes up the wife or servants and all the neighbors, but no one kicks very hard, for it is an ancient custom.

Mexican wives do not wait up for their husbands to come home, armed with rolling pins.

EFFICIENT MANAGER RECEIVES PROMOTION

J. F. Adams, who for many years has been manager at Burlingame for the Pacific Telephone and Telegraph Company, will soon assume the responsible position of comercial agent, with headquarters in San Francisco, according to an announcement made by P. R. Roller, division manager for the Coast division.

"Frank's" many friends are greatly pleased with the news of his appointment, which comes in recognition of his rich telephone experience, covering a period of almost thirty-three years. He first entered the service of the telephone company during the year 1896, and from April of that year until April, 1905, he occupied important positions in the East and South Exchanges of San Francisco. He then went to Goldfield, Nevada, to superintend the reconstruction of the Nevada Consolidated Telephone and Telegraph Company, serving Tonopah, Goldfield and Rhyloite. This was during the boom days of the mining camps.

Mr. Adams continued to play an important part in the development of telephony in Nevada until February, 1912, when he sold all of his telephone interests there. In April of the same year he assumed the managership for the Pacific Telephone and Telegraph Company of San Mateo and Burlingame and many adjacent exchanges. During the past sixteen years of Adams' management here, the number of telephones in the San Mateo and Burlingame area has grown from 1,200 to 8,000.

C. H. Moore, San Jose district manager, announced that Mr. Adams' position will be filled by L. S. Nevins. "Star," as he is familiarly known to his friends and associates, assumes his new duties with a background of experience that extends back to June, 1921, when he entered the service of the telephone company at Sacramento. Since that time he has held other positions in the company's offices at Fresno and San Francisco.

On March 1, 1926, Nevins became manager for the telephone company at Ukiah, and relinquished that position to assume his new responsibilities.

HUNTERS SLAY 21,515 DEER DURING SEASON

The deer slayers of California hung up the hides of 21,514 deer during the 1928 season, according to information compiled from the duplicate deer tags by the Division of Fish and Game. This is 2,008 more than were accounted for by the rifle experts during the year of 1927, the first season when an accurate account was possible.

Siskiyou county leads with 1,654 this year. This county held the lead established last year also. Mendocino was second. Hunters operating in this section killed 1,468 deer. Lake county was third with 1,038.

While San Francisco county, being entirely a metropolitan district, produced no deer, Los Angeles county which covers a huge area, furnished the big game devotees 368 bucks. In Sacramento county but two deer were killed. In Sutter and Kings counties three fell. Imperial furnished four, while San Diego, the adjoining county, contributed 232 of the deer killed.

The figures show that residents of Los Angeles county killed 1,704 deer, while residents of Siskiyou, the county with the highest record, got 1,020.

The reports being compiled by the Division of Fish and Game will show many interesting things when completed, as area traveled, kind and size of deer killed, and other important facts that are being gathered from the deer tags as fast as it is possible to put them together.

On June 1 of this year the Bell system had 328,000 people engaged in giving telephone service. The Western Electric Company had 44,600 employees and the Bell Telephone Laboratories 4,000 people.

A peach orchard in New Jersey last season produced approximately 175 carloads of peaches. The entire crop was sold by long distance telephone for approximtely $200,000. The telephone charges were $360.

FATIGUE IS BLAMED FOR AUTO MISHAPS

One of the phases of motoring that should be carefully guarded against does not receive the attention required, and that is the pernicious fatigue resulting from a long session at the streering wheel. Scientists declare that over-taxed strength impairs the action of the senses and faculties even to the extent of the dullness produced by intoxication.

The exertion of a long and unbroken journey reduces the strength to such a degree that the driver is devoid of the strength and alertness necessary to avoid accidents. This, according to information received by the National Automobile Club, is becoming prominent as the cause of accidents that very often prove disastrous.

It is a common experience to be unconsciously tired, and to become aware of the fact only when the exertion ceases, which is all the more reason why motorists should not remain at the wheel to the point of unconsciously exhausting their strength. It behooves all motorists to take cognizance of this fact, especially now that the rainy season is here and more effort is required to avoid dangerous skids.

LEARN TO WALK WITH CARE AND CAUTION

Thousands of citizens on the streets and highways of California, from among whom a great toll of sacrifice of life is taken, have not learned to walk with care and caution. This statement is made by the safety conference of the California Development Association in launching the statewide educational campaign on jay-walking for the month of December.

Chief Frank G. Snook of the State Division of Motor Vehicles, who is co-operating with the safety conference in the December jay-walking ban, makes the following statement as to the hazards of not looking before you step:

"Pedestrians make up about one-third of all persons killed in traffic accidents, according to reports reaching the Division of Motor Vehicles. In many instances the fault is clearly that of the pedestrian in carelessly walking into the street from behind parked vehicles or in otherwise crossing roadways heedlessly.

"It is an excellent plan for pedestrians compelled to walk along the county or state highways to walk on the left side, facing traffic. The pedestrian is thus able to observe and to avoid on-coming traffic. It is very dangerous for the pedestrian to walk on the right side with his back to on-coming traffic, as records show that many persons so doing have been struck and killed or seriously injured.

"Pedestrians should familiarize themselves with local regulations requiring the use of marked crosswalks. Jay-wlaking is a vice for which there is on excuse. The pedestrian must exercise proper precautions for his own safety in order that pedestrian injuries and fatalities be decreased in California."

VOLUME II FRIDAY, DECEMBER 7, 1928 NUMBER 19

Published in the interests of the People of Daly City and vicinity by H. H. Smith and Employees.

More Whispers

You've heard much about "whispering" campaigns. To husbands, we want to whisper these Christman gift suggestions for wives: Breakfast nook, colonial china cabinets, built-in ironing boards and bookcases. If you order now, we'll have 'em in plenty of time before Christmas. And we'll keep the secret, too!

Fatal

"Just to think, every time I breathe somebody dies."

"Better try Listerine."

Impossible

"I was outspoken in my sentiments at the club this afternoon," said Mrs. Garrulous to her husband the other evening.

With a look of astonishment he replied: "I can't believe it, my dear. Who outspoke you?"

Over the Phone: "Do you have Prince Albert in a can?"

Service: "Yes, sir, we do."

O. T. P.: "Let him out."

Live Wire Daughter

"Say, Mose, howcum you name dat gal 'Lectricity?"

"Well, you see, Sam, mah wife's name am Dinah, and mine's Mose, and dynamos makes "lectricity; so us jes named ouh little gal 'Lectricity."

Roofing Materials, Shingles, Etc. Now is the time to get ready for the rain.

"It's the little things in life that tell," said the co-ed as she yanked her kid brother from under the sofa.

There's a reason why Aberdeen satisfies. Try it.

Stung Again

Aviator: "Wan'na fly?"

Friend (rather anxiously): "Sure thing."

Aviator: "All right. Just wait till I catch one for you."

A man who is clever enough to be boss at home is also wise enough not to brag about it.
